Pulsar Digisight Ultra LRF

All the great features of the N455 Ultra plus it is fitted with an accurate laser rangefinder for pinpoint shot placement.

Digisight Ultra LRF N455 $2899.00
1280x720 / 4.5x-18x / FoV 6.2˚ / DR 500m

Pulsar Digex

The new Pulsar Digex offers the same performance and features as the Digisight Ultra, but in an elegant, versatile 30mm tube design for easy mounting on to a variety of firearms.

Digex N455 $2499.00
1280x720 / 4x-16x / FoV 6.5˚ / DR 500m

NIGHT VISION MONOCULAR / CLIP-ON

Pulsar Forward

The Pulsar Forward has the same optical performance capability as the outstanding Digisight Ultra and Digex. Ideal for spotting with the supplied quick-change 5x monocular eyepiece, then rapidly fit to the front of your daylight riflescope for shooting.

Forward FN455 $2699.00
1280x720 / 5x / FoV 6.3˚ / DR 500m

Pulsar optics represent state-of-the-art European technology, design and engineering.

Choosing the right optic for your own requirements ensures optimum performance and product satisfaction. When you choose a Pulsar thermal or night vision optic, you will benefit from the following:

- Ultra-sensitive <40mk thermal sensor and precision optics
- 3 year warranty (1 year battery) when bought through NZ Distributor
- Tough, fully waterproof IPx7 (IEC 60529) housing
- Updatable firmware, video recording and streaming in select models
- Stadiametric rangefinder, picture-in-picture, and fine image control
- Riflesights withstand heavy recoiling calibres such as .375H&H Mag
- Riflesights have advanced reticle and sighting-in functions
- Spare and replacement batteries are easy to purchase and use

Night Vision versus Thermal Imaging

This choice depends upon the user's own requirements. Night vision requires a clear line-of-sight between the viewer and the target, has a shorter distance capability, but costs less. If the target is partially obscured by vegetation, rabbits in long grass for instance, then thermal is the best choice.

Using a thermal monocular to spot with and a night vision riflescope to shoot is a cost effective option that enables the shooter to identify their target, even when partially obscured. Great for safer bush stalking!

Magnification and field-of-view are important considerations for choosing any sporting optic. High magnification enables better target identification and long range detection. At closer distances and with moving targets a lower magnification would be a better option. Devices fitted with a larger 640x480 sensor will produce the best of both worlds when compared to a smaller 384x288 sensor.

We recommend that you visit your local dealer to discuss and look through our models to see which is right for you.

The images on the left are formed with a 38mm focal length lens, while the images on the right are formed with a 50mm lens.

The lower magnification yields a wider field-of-view, which is better for close range observation and moving targets.

The higher magnification is better for identification at longer distances and for precision shooting.

All Pulsar thermal optics and night vision riflescopes are internationally controlled 'Dual-Use' goods that must not be exported outside of New Zealand.

The Pulsar warranty only covers goods that have been bought through the licenced territorial distributor. Make sure your Pulsar product is sold with a gold box sticker.
